Are Medicare and Medicaid the same?

In 2020, over 297 million people had health insurance in the US. This number is a drastic increase from the previous decades. However, over 30 million people are still without essential health benefits, making up nearly 10% of the country. Since 1965, both Medicare and Medicaid have helped retirees and low-income families get the covered services to pay health care costs. Because these services have similar names, many people confuse them. In short, Medicare is an insurance program for adults 65 and older and for those with specific disabilities. When you join Medicare, there are four options (Part A, Part B, Part C, and Part D) available within the program. Understanding these four parts of the program is the best way to get the most out of your medical coverage. This is a federal program run by the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS). To learn more about Medicare, go to www.medicare.gov. Medicaid is financial assistance for anyone who falls under the income threshold. Coverage and eligibility varies by state. Adults 65 and older can use both plans if eligible. One of the most significant differences between Medicare and Medicaid is that the Medicaid provides nursing home and personal care services, which Medicare doesn't typically cover. Medicaid is run by state and local governments within federal guidelines. To learn more about Medicaid, go to www.medicare.gov. There is much to understand about both programs. Doing your research and learning about these programs will help you to better understand how these programs can best be used to meet your needs.
